Hello to the NUTS

I have found the best possible place for our picnic this year. I wanted a place in one of the canyons where it would be cooler, but I also wanted a place where we could play some games with a detector. After searching for some time, I had to give up the canyon idea in favor of the detector games.

Liberty Park will fit our needs very well. On the east side of the park is a volley ball pit where we will each take a turn with a detector searching for buried treasure. I will bring the detector. It will be set on "all metals". Each person will detect until they find something, so every one will have an even chance of finding something really nice.

There will be an assortment of soda pop, and the club is also providing the hot dogs and burgers for everyone. Bring a side dish if you can, but if that's not practical, just bring your appetite. There will be plenty to eat.

We will have our regular Find of the Month competition, so bring your stuff you found this month and show it off. I haven't found anything yet this month, but I hope to get out this weekend, so you'll have some good competition.

Thanks for your patience in waiting for your dimes for the past Finds of the Month. I will bring the dimes this month and square up with everybody.

I also appreciate Bob Campbell helping us out with a video to watch last month.

Everyone come and share the food and treasures, and enjoy the last week of the summer.

Dave

The Marble Bush

The jewel was large and purple, right on top of the ground, buried only to the edge where the mounting would have held it. We brought out the screen and shovel to see what else was in the area. We started digging about 4 feet from the spot where I had picked up the jewel. It was just purple glass; I knew it was glass. Yet there is the dream nagging at the back of your mind, like the dream that somewhere you have a rich uncle who has willed you a fortune. The purple stone could be a real amethyst.

The second or third shovel gave us a clay marble. Then one or two more clay marbles with every screen. Then we found a golden brown Bennington, a watch case, a small padlock, several buttons, a gold ring, and those clay marbles kept coming up. They were various colors, some nearly white, some chocolate brown and some golden yellow orange.

The closer we got to a certain brickellbush, the more marbles we found. But the bush was 8-foot tall and full of those mean thorns that grab your clothes, and then break off under your flesh. We used the long handle of the shovel to reach under the bush and remove dirt from around the roots. Eventually we dug out enough that we could push over the bush and cut it from the ground. We found a total of 51 marbles all within six feet of the bush.

By this time we were tired and hungry, and the day was getting hot. We drove home satisfied that we had found enough for one weekend.

How did the marbles get there? Were the town kids playing marbles in the shade of the bush? Did somebody's mother throw out the bag of marbles after her boy grew up and moved away? Then a horrible thought jumped into my mind, and it won't leave no matter how rational I try to be.

We killed the bush that laid the golden marbles.
